THIS DIAMOND SMUGGLING CASE WAS ONE OF THE MOST SPECTACULAR WE'VE INVESTIGATED IN YEARS. IT BEGAN IN ANTWERP, BELGIUM--

The ROBIN BARON

THIS is the biggest thing that's ever happened to the Deep Pool Community!" exclaimed Robert Rabbit.

"I'll say!" agreed Roscoe Raccoon. "It isn't every day we get visiting royalty! I wonder if he'll arrive on time!"

"Well, late or early," said Gerald Giraffe, "we're ready for him—er—I think! Let's see—we've rolled out the red carpet—the parade is lined up—Professor Owl is ready with his speech of welcome—"

"Er—well, almost ready, Gerald," said Oscar Owl, removing his professor's cap and wiping the beads of perspiration from his brow. "There are just one or two lines I haven't quite got down pat yet! Excuse me while I go behind this tree and rehearse!"

"Okay, Professor!" said Barney Bear. "But don't take too long—he'll be here any minute! Oh, look—here comes Mrs. Rosie Robin—all dressed up in her best bonnet! Gosh, she sure must feel important, being a cousin two hundred times removed of a real, live baron! Just imagine being related to royalty!"

"I can hardly believe it myself, Barney!" chirped Mrs. Robin, hopping up, looking very flustered and pretty. "Why, I didn't even dream there WAS a baron in our family until that letter arrived from him last week saying he was coming to visit! My! My! I've plumb tuckered myself getting everything ready for him! I do hope he'll find everything to his liking!"

Suddenly there was the roll of drums and the blare of trumpets. "He's coming! He's coming!" shouted Robert Rabbit. "The sentinels have spotted him!"

Hastily everyone cleared a space in the village square and a moment later they burst into loud cheers as the Robin Baron swooped down to a very elegant landing. "My! My!" he said condescendingly as he peered around at them through his monocle. "What a common-looking lot you all are! But then, I might have expected it! Here, boy—carry my bag, and take care that you don't scratch it!" He threw his valise into Professor Owl's arms.

"Er—I beg your pardon, Your Highness, Mr. Baron Robin," said the Professor, "but I'm the Mayor of this community and before I do anything else, I must make a speech of welcome—"

"Oh, bother!" said the Baron. "I haven't time for such stupid procedure! It's bound to be dull! Tell me, where's that distant cousin of mine, Mrs. Rosie Robin?"

"Here I am, Your Lordship, cousin dear!" gulped Mrs. Robin, hurrying forward. "I bid you welcome, I'm sure!"

"Hmph!" said the Baron, eyeing Mrs. Robin disdainfully. "How dowdy you are, my dear! Oh well, I suppose I must make the best of it and of everything else while I'm here! But come—I'm famished! You realize, of course, that I dine on only the rarest of delicacies, and my bed must have silk sheets and a mattress of the softest down and—"

The Baron's cold and commanding voice faded into the distance as Mrs. Robin led him anxiously toward her cottage.

"Well, how do you like that!" exclaimed Roscoe Raccoon, "He's the most ignoble nobleman I've ever heard of!"

"I suppose that's what comes of being better than other people!" sighed Elmer Elephant. "Or thinking you are, anyway! What do you say, Professor Owl?"

"I say wait and see! He may be better-natured after he's rested up a bit!" said Professor Owl. "After all, he IS our GUEST! Meanwhile, I'm going to do some investigating!"

But two weeks later things were no better. In fact, they were so bad that an indignation meeting was held in the village square to discuss the problem.

"It's an outrage!" declared Barney Bear. "Guest or no guest! Royalty or no royalty!"

"He treats us like the dirt under his feet!" complained Elmer Elephant. "And that's going some when a robin does that to an elephant!"

"Well, well, well!" broke in a sneering voice. "What have we here! The rabble in a gabble!" It was the Baron Robin coming toward them.

"Now look here!" retorted Pete Possum. "You can't talk to us that way—"

"What he means," interrupted Professor Owl diplomatically, "is that we were wondering if you wouldn't be a little more co-operative—"

"Co-operative!" smirked the Baron. "Hah! You ought to feel honored that I so much as let you black my boots!"

"I'm sorry to hear you say that," said Professor Owl, "because now I have no choice but to tell everyone the truth about you! I would have kept your secret if you had proved you could be a decent fellow in spite of it, but now it's too late! Listen, everybody! I have been in communication with the authorities and have just learned that this fellow isn't a baron at all! He's an ordinary commoner putting on airs!"

"DID YOU HEAR THAT?" cried everyone. "HE'S A FRAUD! A PHONEY! A FAKE! HA-HA! HO-HO! DRIVE THE IMPOSTOR OUT! AWAY WITH HIM!" And they drove the Baron out of town, laughing derisively and shaking their fists at him.

Peace had just begun to settle upon the village when Robert Rabbit looked up and saw the Baron returning. "LOOK!" he yelled. "How do you like the nerve of that guy! He's coming back! Come on—we'll REALLY give him a royal welcome this time! HA-HA-HA!"

"NO—NO—DON'T!" cried the Robin Baron as sticks and stones and howls of laughter began to rain upon him from all the citizens of the Deep Pool Community. "I've come back to warn you—there's a fire starting at the other end of the forest. You must hurry and put it out or you'll all be burned!"

"GOODNESS ME! IT'S TRUE!" cried Elmer Elephant, stretching himself to his fullest height and peering over the trees. "COME ON—THERE ISN'T A MINUTE TO LOSE!"

Later when the danger was over, everyone gathered gratefully around the Robin Baron. "Gosh, Baron," said Gerald Giraffe, "it was sure swell of you to risk your life to come back to warn us, especially with us throwing sticks and stones that way!"

"It wasn't the sticks and stones that was hardest to come back against," said the Baron. "It was the laughter! But that's the way it's been all my life—people have always laughed because I'm a nobody! That's why I pretended to be somebody else!"

"Well, nobody's laughing at you now, are they?" asked Professor Owl with a wise twinkle in his eye.

"Gosh!" gulped the Robin Baron, surprised. "That's right! And everyone knows who I really am, too!"

"It just goes to prove," said Professor Owl, "that you don't have to try to be somebody else if you're really worthwhile yourself! And though you may not be a baron, you've proved to all of us that you're certainly ONE PRINCE OF A FELLOW!"
